"Hope is being able to see that there is light despite all of the darkness." -Desmond Tutu

Dear Friends,

Whether it be with a behavioral health issue or as a leader, it takes courage to admit that you need help. I have a deep respect for those who acknowledge their struggles and turn to Samaritan for counseling and consulting services. I believe it is hope for a better tomorrow that fuels that courage and Samaritan is proud to have been a part of that hopeful future for 45 years.

Increasingly the dialogue around behavioral health has become more public. It is my hope that this trend continues and the stigma around behavioral healthcare diminishes. As you may have heard, Samaritan is getting a makeover. A major goal of this make over is to directly address stigma and inform and encourage individuals to they seek the care they need. Congregations and nonprofit leaders are also sometimes reluctant to see seek help. Our new initiative will reinforce the fact that only healthy leaders can best serve their members and the community. Stay tuned for all the exciting changes.

Blessings of hope,

Scott Mitchell, President & CEO

A Story of Hope

Cece (name changed for privacy), a child of alcoholics, desperately wanted her parents' love. Yet, neither were able to give her what she needed. She had begun destructive behaviors when she first came to Samaritan. Struggling with social interactions and self-soothing, Cece was unable to recognize how smart, kind and special she was. She is now coming out of her cocoon and growing into her power. She is assertive, more confident, and has started dating someone kind and responsible. Last week she even began looking into college. Says her therapist, "Her happy heart warms my soul. She is starting to see just how amazing she is."
